Kinfolk Vol 7

Volume Six was my first Kinfolk and, despite reading it belatedly after Christmas (usually the time I least want to hear about the holidays), I enjoyed it very much. Volume Seven feels less intimate, less affecting, somehow, though it may be due in part to not having the novelty of my first experience with the publication.

This issue of Kinfolk rejects the definition of a good education as one that ends with good grades. In putting together our fall issue, we considered education as a lifelong pursuit: What can we learn about our bodies, minds, beliefs and societies, and who can teach us? In Los Angeles, we meet Erica Chidi Cohen, the co-founder of Loom ...
