Social Change in the Society | Applied Social Psychology (ASP)

As can be seen, in the course of social development, society is moved by a range of different psychological motives. Self actualizing motives (wanting self-development and social progress for altruistic and ethical reasons) are normally the last to be fulfilled.

Social Development and Social Change - World Animal

Social change can occur in two ways: progressively/positive change or digressively/negative change. In progressive change, the community abandons strange customs, such as barbarism and adopts universally accepted norms (civilization). In digressive change however, a civilized society reverts to social evils that threaten its existence.
