The past does not define who we are and neither do our mistakes. We allow them to because we think that is the way it has to be. We let people see us for our past and our mistakes when they should be seeing who we really are at this moment. Let's face it, our past and mistakes are all trials for who we are becoming.

So, in a sense,
Shakespeare was right.
The past is prologue.
However, there's a
subtle yet powerful
distinction between the past defining us and the past shaping
us. Our pasts shape us, but they do not define
us. We let the past
